University Central of Ashdod is an independent, non-for-profit religious institution. The governing board is composed of five volunteer members and they are the decision-makers of the institution.

The institution has a physical presence in the Cities of Chicago, Panama and Jerusalem. It is authorized as a Higher Learning Faith Based Organization (FBO). It is sponsored by the UCEA Educational Foundation (www.ucea.org.il). It was founded in the Jewish State of Israel and it was incorporated under the Law of State of Illinois.

In the United States, various states impose regulatory requirements on educational institutions operating within their boundaries. Several states have sought to assert jurisdiction over online educational institutions that have not physical location or other presence in the state but offer educational services to student who reside in the state, or that recruit prospective student sin the state. State regulatory requirements for online education are inconsistent among states and not well developed in many jurisdictions. As such, these requirements change frequently and, in some instances, are not clear or are left to the discretion of state regulators. Our changing business and the constantly changing regulatory require us to evaluate continually our state regulatory compliance activities. In the event, we are found not to be in compliance, and a state seeks to restrict one or more of our business activities within its boundaries, we may not be able to recruit students from that state and may have to cease providing service to students in that state.
